Biography

Andrews was born on November 26, 1892 in Dickson, Tennessee. Her parents had started a congregation in their home, and at an early age she had heard J. M. McCaleb (1862-1953), on furlough from missionary work in Japan, speak on his work in Japan. Andrews studied at Dickson College and Peabody College before arriving in Japan as an independent missionary on January 16, 1916. During her mission work she supported the building of churches in Shizuoka, Shimizu 清水, Okitsu 興津 and Numazu. She was imprisoned during the Second World War and suffered from tuberculosis. She was saved by a soldier who had arrived with MacArthur’s occupation force in 1945. Her tomb was established with the help of Oiha, an orphan who had been cared for by Andrews like a mother.

One of the materials in the collection is a photograph of Andrews’ tomb in Numazu City 沼津市, Shizuoka prefecture 静岡県, Japan. The card containing the photograph includes a transcription of the tomb inscription as well as a translation into English. An article in the on-line magazine Carolina Messenger by Hugo McCord <<http://www.carolinamessenger.com/images/089904.pdf>> relates some information that the author learned while in Dickson, TN in 1962.

Collection Scope and Content Note

None of the photographs are dated, although a few have names of “Japanese helpers” photographed with Sarah S. Andrews. One is given as Iki Naemura, another as Oiki. This was possibly the “Oiha” mentioned in the McCord article. One photograph shows Andrews with a woman identified as “Miss Cypert.” As of the date of this Finding Aid, no further papers of Andrews have been traced to archival repositories elsewhere.

Processing

Metal clips and staples were removed from materials and folded items were flattened. Photographs were placed in Mylar enclosures, new acid-free folders and box.
